2. Each commissary is the main store of its cadre unit. It has its own storage rooms and supplies its magazines which are located outside of the post of the commissary. The commissaries purchase their goods and those for their magazines at the Basa in Werder. When the magazine is located nearer to the Basa in Werder than to its commissary, the magazine may purchase at the Basa in Werder directly on orders of the supply officer. Chief of each magazine is a lieutenant or a senior lieutenant. Each magazine has its own forwarding clerk. The personnel strength of magazine depends on the strength of the unit to be supplied. The following is given as an example:

Commissary (9) Mashkin is located at the main store of the cadre unit in Brandenburg, the post of commissary Brandenburg-Industriehafen. This commissary, and at the same time, main store, supplies its four subordinate magazines Brandenburg-Elst, Elstal, Stendal-Borstel, and Oranienburg. Part of the magazines receive their goods immediately at the Basa in Werder, and they are supplied by their commissary which at the same time is the main store. There are no binding regulations which magazines are to be supplied. They order directly. The way of handling depends on agreement between the supply officers, the main office and the Basa in Werder. Goods for a commissary are shipped by rail.

2. [REDACTED] Comment. [REDACTED] commissary (3) Gitun supplied the Alt-Loennewitz and Finsterwalde military posts. The order to purchase in Leipzig and Dresden is presumably connected with the supply of the ground attack regiment expected to return to Brandis.

3. [REDACTED] Comment. The establishment of a magazine in Oranienburg is possibly connected with the re-occupation of Oranienburg airfield by a flying unit.
